SOUTHERN COAL OPERATORS AGREE TO TRUCE PROPOSAL

Labor Peace Brought To Coal Mines When Settlement Seemed Darkest

MINES TO REOPEN

Expect Full Mining Operations To Be Resumed On Thursday

By Jack Vincent
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Apr. 29.—(INS)—The 29-day-old soft coal stoppage, which had threatened to slowly stall many vital national defense industries, ended today after Southern operators capitulated "without equivocation" to President Roosevelt's proposal for a truce with John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers Union.

Since northern operators already in agreement with Lewis, the action of the southern group brought labor peace to the coal mines when hopes for a settlement seemed darkest. Lewis also advised the White House that he would accept the truce. Charles F. O'Neill, spokesman for the northern group, said that the capitulation means "that we can all go back to work."

Many mines, which had been shut down since April 1, were expected to be back in operation within 24 hours, others within 48 hours so that full mining operations were to be resumed by Thursday morning.

End of the stoppage came with dramatic suddenness. During the night the southern operators, through their chairman, L. Ebersole Gaines, wired President Roosevelt.

"The undersigned representing the 13 southern districts which have not yet negotiated a wage agreement accept your proposal without equivocation. We are ready to resume work immediately."

It meant that 400,000 idle miners could get back to their jobs of digging coal.

Under the President's proposal, the southern operators will grant miners a $1 a day wage increase to a $6.60 a day rate, and then negotiate with Lewis' union for a demand for 40 cents more. Lewis has demanded that the South grant $7 a day, the same wage that northern operators have agreed to pay but the South has been steadfast in its refusal to surrender "the wage differential favoring it."

Key figure in the settlement was Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce and Federal loan administrator. Jones was designated by President Roosevelt to confer with the southern operators during the night and he kept at it until they agreed to Mr. Roosevelt's insistence on a truce.

It was regarded as significant that Jones probably would have been the man to run the Southern mines had President Roosevelt invoked the draft industry section of the conscription law to force reopening of the mines.

Such a step had been suggested by Sen. Hatch (D) N. M., a member of the Senate Committee investigating the defense program. Hatch, just a short time before the settlement of the controversy was announced, said: "I know what I would do. I would get coal. I Continued On Page Two

RADIO-CONTROLLED PLANE TO CHANGE WARFARE

U. S. Military Scientists Envision Pilotless, Bomb-Laden Planes

TO ATTACK ENEMY

(Note: The army as an organization is now ready to strike, if necessary, reports Griffing Bancroft, I. N. S. staff reporter at Washington, who has just completed a 6,000-mile tour of army posts and other defense installations throughout the country. In a series of articles, of which this is the sixth and last, he describes just what has been done—and what remains to be done—in defense preparations.—INS)

By GRIFFING BANCROFT
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Apr. 29.—Army scientists in the huge military laboratory at Wright Field, Ohio, are working on radio-controlled planes and bombs which, if perfected, would revolutionize aerial warfare.

Pilotless target planes are now flown by ground radio control and small ships can be navigated at sea in the same way. The weakness so far is that the radio control can extend only for about five miles.

Should this distance factor be overcome, military scientists envision bomb-laden planes, or simply motored bombs, being flown with no man aboard over enemy cities and dropped.

Although defense emphasis today is on "freezing" certain types of equipment for big scale production, the army nevertheless maintains a $25,000,000 plant at Wright Field working constantly on this and many other efforts to improve the instruments of war.

New material—ranging from food-stuffs and jackknives to four-motored bombers—are given the most detailed tests and research is continually underway in all fields allied to the military—engineering, medicine, photography, radio, etc.

In addition to the radio control research, and the numberless less spectacular proposals, Wright Field scientists are also working on at least two other ideas which might change the entire complexion of aerial war. These are:

1.—A system of casting plastics which, if perfected, would enable manufacturers to turn out airplanes "by the hundreds a day."

This developmental method of utilizing plastics for plane parts and casting them to save the time-consuming labor of riveting, is similar to a process used by the Ford Motor Company in making automobiles, the scientists Continued On Page Two

Makes Own Garments Despite Advanced Age

To sew for three-quarters of a century, and to continue to make one's wardrobe when in one's 85th year of age, would be regarded by most people as something unusual—but to the Bristol woman who at that advanced age is still fashioning her own clothing, it is nothing unusual.

Mrs. Jesse L. Stackhouse, 530 Swain street, is the individual who considers her accomplishments as commonplace, but those who examine the fine stitches in the dresses, aprons, and undergarments she makes; and also those who view her other types of hand-work, such as hand-crocheted rugs and smaller crocheted pieces, feel somewhat awed by their own use of talents.

Commencing to sew when she was about nine or ten years of age, Mrs. Stackhouse first hemmed towels under the watchful eye of her mother. As her work improved she advanced to other types of sewing, and at the age of 13 years she made a dress for her sister.

"I have made most of my own clothing during my life-time," she says, and even now I make practically everything I wear, with of course the exception of coats. But I have in my day made a number of coats."

For many years she used the sewing machine, but now she has someone sew the seams on the machine after she finished the basting. "Sewing has always been a great pleasure to me," she adds. "I always took a fancy to it."

The other great enjoyment in Mrs. Stackhouse's life is attendance at services of worship, and seldom does a Sunday pass but what she is present at service in Bristol Presbyterian Church. She has been a member of that church for many decades, making application to join when she was 14 years of age.

Born on the farm of her grandfather, George Yonker, near Langhorne, Mrs. Stackhouse has made her home here all of her life.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Hollow Sounding

Washington, April 28.
SO far as the record is concerned, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., has put himself very straight indeed. When last week he went before the House Ways and Means Committee to urge the raising of $3,500,000,000 in new taxes, he also urged a drastic reduction in non-defense governmental expenses.

THIS, of course, is the only defensible position a Secretary of the Treasury can afford to take. Only every possible economy can justify so great a tax increase. The leap in abnormal expenses makes it imperative to cut down normal expenses. Taxes and economy are—or, at any rate, should be—in-separably linked. No Government has the right to impose additional taxation burdens without eliminating waste. No surer way to destroy democracy could be found than to pile up expenses and taxes at the same time.

MR. MORGENTHAU, therefore, has assumed the only possible attitude, and in his plea for economy he has echoed, of course, the voice of the President, who made a similar plea last January. But Mr. Morgenthau went further than the President, in that he definitely put his finger on appropriations that should be pruned—for example, a $450,000,000 cut of the farm bill. He also thought cuts might well be made in the $500,000,000 soil conservation payments; in the $300,000,000 CCC; in the $370,000,000 for the NYA; in the $200,000,000 for roads; in the $80,000,000 for postal subsidies, and so forth.

IN fact, Mr. Morgenthau was both concrete and emphatic in what he Continued On Page Two Dorothy battled 244 words in 10 rounds, competing with 39 of the best eighth-grade spellers from all parts of the county.

Mrs. Marie Holland Reports On National Conference Held in Washington

The monthly meeting of executives of the Bristol Branch of American Red Cross was held at headquarters, 120 Mill street, yesterday afternoon at two o'clock.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read by Mrs. Franklin Wallin. The treasurer reported the condition of the treasury and bills pending.

The production department, represented by Mrs. E. Linton Martin, reported 19 women sewing at headquarters with 128 hours to their credit; 12 women sewing at home, and one group sewing together. Twenty persons are knitting, completing ten sweaters, while the total number of garments sewed were 250.

In the surgical department 600 dressings were made and sent to the Southeastern Chapter to be shipped abroad. For the accomplishment of this work, 18 women gave 170 hours for the month of March. The making of surgical dressings is an urgent necessity, it is stated, and the women of Bristol are asked to volunteer for this helpful work. Every Monday, at 120 Mill street, from 9.30 a. m. to four p. m., women will be very welcome to help with this work. A plea is also made for old linen to be taken to headquarters to be used for layettes.

Miss Frances Landreth, home service chairman, reported work on five old cases and two new cases, with 16½ hours spent upon them.

Mrs. Carl de Ganahl and Mrs. H. Doyle Webb reported 20 hours and 10 hours transportation, respectively, taking people to Abington Hospital.

Mrs. Marie Holland reported on the national conference held recently in Washington, D. C., when 5400 persons registered. The statement was made that the three most important things requisite now for England are food, shelter and energy to fight fire.

It was stated that to the 168 base service stations where boys are sent, an increase in Red Cross staff is necessitated, to work hand in hand with the army and navy. "These Red Cross executives are of great help in maintaining the contact between the soldier and his relatives. Since the Spring of 1940 there has been a decided upward trend in service to families of men in the military and naval forces, with continued acceleration in applications because of the defense program."

Mrs. Holland is at the service of those who are interested in securing news of relatives abroad and the Red Cross will make investigation to find relatives from whom no information has been received recently. FEWER NEW AUTOS

Through its representatives, the automobile industry of the United States has agreed to cut production next year by 20 per cent. General Motors has announced that no new models are planned for 1943. Work of retooling for 1942 models is about completed.

Since 1941 production is expected to exceed 5,000,000 units, the 20 per cent reduction would cut the 1942 manufacture by about 1,000,000 cars. The magnitude of the saving in manpower and materials is obvious. As the largest consumer of steel, gasoline, rubber, plate glass, nickel and lead, the automobile industry through its voluntary cut in production can make available for defense work tremendous quantities of these essential materials. At the same time skilled labor will be released, as well as management brains, for the national effort.

While some of the companies will continue to manufacture various types of motor vehicles for Army use, others will turn—in fact have turned—to the manufacture of special equipment, from airplane engines to guns and gun carriages. But if this conversion is to be effective strikes such as the one now threatening General Motors must be prevented at all cost. The "hundred days" of crucial production drive are slipping by fast.

American motorists should have no difficulty in getting along with 4,160,000 new automobiles in 1942, the quota under the agreement. There's life in the old bus yet—though that doesn't include the rattletap menaces which should be off the highway anyhow. Some car owners who have been accustomed to changing models every year may have to skip a season. And others may get just as much fun by turning in an old model for one not quite so old, which may give a flip to the sluggish used car market.

ANOTHER SHRINE

Plans are being made for the dedication of another American shrine. This is the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson at Staunton, Virginia. It was bought in 1938 with funds raised in Virginia and is now in possession of an incorporated organization known as the Wilson Birthplace Foundation. The date set for the dedication is May 4.

President Roosevelt, referring to the work of restoration as a "patriotic service," has added: "It is a place which will increase in sentimental and historic interest as the decades pass and all lovers of history and historic associations will be your debtors for the constructive effort you and your associates are putting forward in preserving this American home from the hazards of time."

Although Americans look upon their nation as young in years, it is in fact one of the oldest. War, conquest, revolution have changed the map of the rest of the world and governments everywhere have undergone radical change since this Republic was created. One of the signs that it is becoming older is the multiplicity of shrines and monuments being created from coast to coast. When the nation was young it was living the events that have created these.

Automobile traffic is reported to be the heaviest in history, but to many a driver attempting to park it has seemed that it was automobile parking that was setting a new record.

Jones, after conferring with the southern operators for several hours, was finally given a copy of the telegram the group sent the President. Further, the southern operators advised the loan administrator:

"You are advised further that our conference has by resolution agreed to give a wage increase of $1.00 per day on the basic wage rate and make a relative increase for all piece workers."

Then the operators thanked Jones "most heartily for your co-operation." Jones appearance in the negotiation was a surprise. While he talked the southerners into accepting the presidential proposal, William H. Davis, vice-chairman of the National Defense Mediation Board, which had failed to settle the dispute, kept in close touch with Lewis and northern operators.

Davis, according to White House secretary Stephen T. Early, told the President that the terms for reopening of the mines were acceptable to Lewis.

Up until almost the last minute of the settlement, Lewis and O'Neil joined in placing blame for the long deadlock on southern operators. Lewis called some of the southern operators "carpetbaggers" and "Charlie McCarthy" for northern interests. But southern operators claimed that they must have the wage differential to survive economically.

A Palatable Poemeal

THERE is joy in the family when grandmother bakes delectable morsels—pies, pudding or cakes.

Crusty Sugar Biscuits

2 cups sifted cake flour; 2 teaspoons double-acting baking powder; 1/2 teaspoon salt; 2 teaspoons sugar; 6 tablespoons butter or other shortening; 1/2 cup milk; 5 tablespoons butter; 3/4 cup light brown sugar, firmly packed.

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder, salt, and sugar, and sift again. Cut in shortening. Add milk all at once and stir carefully until all flour is dampened. Then stir vigorously until mixture forms a soft dough and follows spoon around bowl. Turn out on slightly floured board and knead 30 seconds. Roll 1/4 inch thick and cut with floured 1 1/2 inch biscuit cutter.

Place 1/2 inch apart on ungreased baking sheet and bake in hot oven (425° F.) 12 to 15 minutes. Cream butter and brown sugar together. Split biscuits and spread sugar mixture between halves, using 1 teaspoon to a biscuit, or spread 1/2 teaspoon between halves and 1/2 teaspoon on top. Return to oven and bake 2 minutes. Serve hot. Makes about 3 dozen biscuits.

The President had cancelled a vacation trip to Warm Springs, Ga., in order to stand by and direct the truce. Edward F. McGrady, special assistant to Secretary of War Stimson, warned yesterday that unless peace would come quickly the coal stoppage would have a "catastrophic" effect on the steel, power, explosives, transportation and many other vital national defense industries.

HARD LUCK YOUNGSTER

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.—(INS)—When 12-year-old Hal Dunham broke his right arm last August, that was tough luck. Dr. Richard E. Bullard fixed it up, however, and it healed. When he broke it again, some weeks later, it was a bit tougher. It seemed like the last straw when it snapped again, several weeks ago. Dr. Bullard again put it in a cast. But that wasn't all. A few days later the boy fell breaking the left arm! Now that is in a sling and cast, too.

say. Beyond this they decline to disclose details.

A plane which would mount a 75-millimeter cannon, firing huge shells three inches in diameter and literally capable of blowing enemy aircraft out of the sky.

These heavy guns have actually been fired in tests from four-motored planes, but so far the weight and the recoil have proved too great for effectiveness.

The heaviest gun mounted by planes today is the 37-millimeter cannon. Should armament twice that powerful be carried in the air, planes could, like battleships, stand off miles from each other and blast away. The explosive power of a three-inch shell is such that if it came even close it could cripple a plane.

said on this subject. Nevertheless, he by no means said all that could and should be said. For example, he did not include among appropriations that should be cut, or eliminated, $250,000,000 for the St. Lawrence ship canal. Nor did he mention the inexcusable increase in the appropriation for the Office of Government Reports. He did not mention those because he is in no position to mention them. To have included them would have been to question the action of his White House chief, which—for Mr. Morgenthau—would be an unthinkable thing to do.

ONE is a very large appropriation and the other quite small, but both are wholly unnecessary at this time and could be eliminated without impairing any useful governmental function or affecting our scheme of defense. On the contrary, their elimination would be much to the national interest. In brief, there is no reason whatever why either of these appropriations should be made at this time—and very strong reasons why they should not be made. Yet, incredible as it may seem, the President is personally insisting on both. There is no possible way to reconcile this with Mr. Roosevelt's words, with the logic of the Federal fiscal facts; or the needs of the nation.

NO ONE, of course, knows all this better than Mr. Morgenthau—but he cannot say so. To even indirectly call attention to these unjustifiable appropriations would be construed as criticism or insubordination.

THE Japanese raised a quick apologetic hand. "Not so fast, please, not so fast. I see now that she is not the woman I thought for a moment she might be."

"THE GORGON'S MASK"

by Van Wyck Mason

SYNOPSIS

To the very rim of the Shanghai-Tientsin-Hongkong Far East war threat zone goes Capt. Hugh North to work "on the inside" for peace in the guise of Howard Nevins, big game hunter. Within the hour of his arrival at Honolulu he is warned via phone by a woman's voice to return to the States. That night he attends a gay party tendered by Abner Polk, wealthy American. Alluring Phedre Renoire, hostess; Baron von Rentner, German industrialist; and Hideyo Kanamura, Japanese merchant, attract North's special attention. The party ends when the corpse of an unknown nude beauty comes in on the tide to the gayly illuminated float. Later, North exorcises Coast Artillery Lieut. Wilson Clark for neglect of duty. The latter pleads his love for a mysterious Nadia Stefan, but North orders him home at once. While discussing the girl's death with Bruce Kilgour, British intelligence major, North learns via phone that Lieut. Clark has just died "after a fall from his hotel window." North goes to the morgue and meets its keeper, Capt. Thomas Amalu.

CHAPTER TEN

North strode to the slab bearing the slight burden. He must, he realized, be very thorough in his examination. This dead beauty was so far, his one and only reliable clue—yes, she had meant something to Kanamura and Phedre Renoire. And he must work fast, too, for those war clouds were piling up all too swiftly on the horizon.

Obedient North's gesture, Captain Amalu stolidly pulled away the sheet to reveal in an unkindly white glare the perfect alabaster outlines of the unknown's figure. The only bits of color on it were twin touches of paint on faintly parted lips.

"We don't get them as pretty as that often," grunted the Eurasian, turning his immense moonlike face. "Last one we had was back in '23 when a big yacht got wrecked off Molokai."

Quite abruptly the intelligence captain took two steps forward, gazed narrowly at the dead girl's neck, and then shot the Hawaiian a searching glance, asking, "Sure no one came with the body?"

Captain Amalu's face was quite devoid of expression. "Quite sure, sir—but a Japanese gentleman came part way from Waikiki side."

"Ah—I see," and North gently tested the still damp hair. But there were no more of those helpful hairs. No doubt the "Japanese gentleman" had seen to that.

Next from his pocket the intelligence captain produced a small lens through which he studied the head, face, and shoulders. "That wound must be somewhere. When the cold left arm had been minutely examined, North drew out a notebook and pencil.

"What can you tell about her?" the bronze-faced Hawaiian queried anxiously. "We're trying to complete our identification before the morning editions of the newspapers come out." His flat visage contracted a little. "You know how it is, sir; the public is always so quick to criticize."

A smile of sympathy flitted across North's gaunt features. "Yes, Captain, I know how it is."

Captain Amalu hesitated, then turned the body over with the dexterity of long practice. "I noticed one thing, sir. Do you see?"

At the base of the skull where North had previously tested was visible a single drop of blood.

"I wondered about that, sir."

The intelligence captain's face and voice were utterly devoid of expression as he said: "Interesting, Captain Amalu—very interesting. It looks as if your men now had something definite to work on."

The Eurasian looked both bewildered and unhappy. "Work on? This one blood spot cannot be of such importance, sir."

"If my guess is right," North corrected gravely, "that spot of blood which you say 'cannot be of such importance' may very well explain her death."

It seemed impossible that Captain Amalu's ordinarily large eyes could grow any wider, but they did. "That little drop of blood? I am afraid you make fun of me."

"Not at all," North hastened to say. "I believe that an autopsy will show that a needle was expertly driven into the nearby nerve center—killing her instantly. The murderer, however, timed his thrust badly, so that she died with her lungs full of air—and so floated. But—frowning, he checked himself. "Perhaps the killer did want her to float."

"But who is she?" insisted the Hawaiian.

"I think you can say this much, that from these traces of callus I'd venture she was once a ballet dancer—and later got her living otherwise—as a less strenuous entertainer, perhaps."

"Why... entertainer?"

"Two things—manicured toenails and the nearly vanished calluses on her feet seem to indicate that she's been through with dancing quite a while. Further, there's a trace of perfume in her hair of the type much used by such gay restaurant charmers."

Punctuating each point that North made the Eurasian's head nodded.

"Yes, sir, I see. And of what nationality would you say she was?"

Captain North straightened and again tested the texture of one damp lock above a small pierced ear.

"On that question it's very easy to fall into error," for the time being it's impossible to be sure. I suppose you checked up on the customs and immigration reports?"

The other's voice boomed hollowly in that desolate chilled room. "Yes, there is no report of her entry."

"Perhaps this will help us."

The Hawaiian looked a little uneasy as North bent again over the corpse's rigid left arm and studied it narrowly under his lens.

"What do you see?"

The intelligence captain invited the other's inspection. With an obvious effort Captain Amalu bent down. "I see some very little white marks on the skin," he mumbled through a little cloud of vapor.

"Like scars. What are they?"

North smiled mirthlessly. "Scars... I noticed them on this interesting young woman's left shoulder during the early part of the evening and so—"

Even while he spoke, the intelligence captain produced from his pocket a small porcelain jar.

"Nothing but lampblack and vaseline," he explained to the sadly puzzled police captain. "It'll come off without leaving a trace."

Deliberately, with the ball of his third finger, he placed a dab of the sticky black substance on the dead girl's arm, then spread it with quick deft motions until the sable paste had faded to a dark gray. The morgue was chilly. This room—

Chilled room?... Where had he heard those words before?... With a deep sense of annoyance he recalled that unknown woman's voice on the phone. "... First Cross—and now Clark would be here soon. And then—would he himself occupy one of those hard white enamel slabs?"

A moment later Captain Amalu's slightly pop eyes protruded still further.

"Why—why, look, there is a design on her arm!"

All at once Captain North straightened with two blackened fingers held carefully away from his white linen coat. "Get outside," he whispered. "Someone's in the corri-

President, and Mr. Morgenthau would cut his throat from ear to ear rather than breathe the mild-est of critical words against him. In consequence, all the unfortunate Secretary can do is to ignore these glaring instances of inconsistency and bad faith in his chief and, stressing other items which should be "re-examined," urge Congress to reduce them.

BUT what is the use of urging Congress to reduce? What is the use of expecting Congress to take seriously the request to cut down on appropriations urged by powerful lobbies and influential Administration officials when it sees the President personally pushing unnecessary increases in appropriations for his pet projects and favored agencies? What's the sense of passing the buck to Congress? Surely, Mr. Morgenthau knows that Congress never has and never will economize by itself. The nature of Congress is such that it is impossible for it to take the initiative in retrenchment or to resist pressure from vested interests and voting groups, such as the farm organization and the pension lobbies. Congress may once in awhile cut down in one direction, but it inevitably increased in another. It never has made and never will make a general reduction in governmental expense by itself.

THE only way by which that can be done is through White House leadership. With the full weight of the President exerted for economy, Congress could, and would, economize. Back in 1933, when Mr. Roosevelt started out to redeem his 1932 promise, Congress, following his lead, economized in a really marvelous way—cut Federal costs a full twenty-five per cent. Of course, six months later, when Mr. Roosevelt turned in the other direction, it was all put back and later a hundred per cent. added. But that did not affect the fact that an extraordinary economy had been achieved with almost complete Congressional unanimity and a minimum of injustice or damage.

MR. ROOSEVELT did that once. He could no again without any trouble at all. Congress would follow his lead in that direction enthusiastically. And he could do nothing better to put this country in position to defend its institutions and preserve its form of government. But is he doing it? Or will he do it? The answer is in his advocacy of the St. Lawrence waterways, his endorsement of the Office of Government Reports increase, his failure to lift a finger to slow down or amend the most gigantic farm appropriation in history. These things leave him in no position to lead Congress in an economy crusade, though Congress is really anxious to be led. They leave him in no position to give Mr. Morgenthau's retrenchment recommendations more than perfunctory support. They make his talk about cutting down all non-defense expenditures seem hollow, hypocritical and insincere. They leave the nation in an encumbered financial condition when, in all its history, it was never so necessary to be solid and strong.

Craftsmen and Illustrators
To Have Their Work Exhibited

The annual spring exhibition at Phillips Mill, New Hope, from May 3rd to May 25th, inclusive, will be a collection of work by craftsmen and illustrators.

New Hope is known as the home of many artists, but the craftsmen of the neighborhood are less familiar. This exhibition will call attention to the high quality of their work in various mediums. Among the exhibits will be stained glass by George Sotter and Valentine D'Ogries, pottery by Delight Ansley, weaving by Mr. and Mrs. Don Davenport, textiles designed by Charles Child and Mr. and Mrs. Bent Andersen, metal work by Charles Schmalz and Amos Armitage, jewelry by Dr. R. C. Magill, woodwork by F. W. Harer, and a great deal of fine work by other craftsmen, both amateur and professional. On Saturday afternoons there will be demonstrations of weaving, pottery, stained glass work, and basket-making, from 2 to 5. A remarkable feature of the exhibition will be a display of Pennsylvania German illuminated manuscripts, or tract-scritten, by John D. Souder, whose work was recently bought by the Metropolitan Museum in New York.

Illustrations are rarely shown at exhibitions, and Phillips Mill is fortunate in having more than 50 fine examples of work by such well-known illustrators as Kurt Wiese, John Falter, Paul Froelich, Charles Child, William Cotton, Charles Hargens, Harry Haenigsen, J. Carver Pusey and David Hendrickson.

The exhibitions will be open daily from one to six, and Saturday and Sunday from 10 to six.

GRAND THEATRE

Great as "Tobacco Road" was on the stage, it is even greater on the screen. Forcefully filmed, directed and enacted, the picturization of the most discussed play of our times, which opened last night at the Grand Theatre, is a tremendously powerful and moving screen experience. Don't miss it!

Produced by Darryl F. Zanuck with striking realism, the human and earthy film pulls no punches and is superb from opening to closing scene. It's played by a brilliant featured cast of top-notch actors.

Charley Grapewin portrays Jeeter Lester and turns in a magnificent performance. Marjorie Rambeau is seen as Sister Bessie while Gene Tierney plays Ellie May and young William Tracy is outstanding as Duke Lester.

RITZ THEATRE

Carvel, the little movie town made famous by the Hardy Family, has a rival in Hollywood. With all the speed of a boom town, the small but thriving city Thornridge was erected on Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's back lot, right adjacent to Carvel, for use in "Keeping Company," the romantic comedy opening today at the Ritz Theatre.

What technique! What finesse! What a man that dashing Cesar Romero is in "Tall, Dark and Handsome!" He's a killer who doesn't kill! He watches his own funeral and it's not done with mirrors!

Preview audiences applauded the fine performance this romantic couple (Romero and Virginia Gilmore) gives in the film, coming today to the Ritz Theatre.

FASHION PARADE

By Orry-Kelly

(Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD, Cal. — (INS) — Not content with stealing the clothes right off the modern man's back, the modern woman is now turning back the pages of history for masculine wardrobe hints of two, three and four centuries ago. Hollywood stylists and the screen stars who have approved the new fashions are tagging them according to the period they represent or as "portrait" styles. Some of those we've been seeing are such precise copies of the clothes worn by dandies of a dim past you expect the inevitable snuff box to be whisked out of a handbag or the lady wearing them to bow gallantly from the waist.

Irene Dunne has one of the new "Cavalier" evening coats in heavy cyclamen taffeta with black lace-trimmed at the wrists and throat. The same type of coat is also the choice for cocktail toppers sometimes in black taffeta, again in dark green faille, brown silk shantung, heavy white linen. They carry tailored or jeweled buttons and the triple flapped pockets that every Virginia gentleman wore on his formal breech coat.

When Bette Davis traveled East two weeks ago for the premiere of "The Great Lie," her wardrobe included several costumes as old-fashioned as Bette's New England farm. In fact, they're styles drawn from the same period, the romantic revolutionary period. She has a three-cornered hat in poudre blue felt with navy veiling, a white quilted pique vestee to wear with a black suit and a gallant navy blue lined with scarlet wool. Scarlet, you know, was the pet color of all colonials.

Your future prints will be taken from nostalgic scenes up and down the Atlantic seaboard and from the lovely wall papers that have never quite been duplicated in our modern homes. You'll wear huge buckles on bright red alligator shoes, cadogan hair bows a la George Washington with starched blouses with huge cuffs, pure white "neck cloths" with your coachman coat.

BRISTOL NINE SCORES 4 TO 1 VERDICT OVER LANGHORNE TEAM

One-Hit Game

CAPRIOTTI RAPS HOMER

Bristol Catcher Again Wields
Potent Stick in Cards'
Victory

By Jack Gill

Only four hits were recorded by the scorekeeper in yesterday's baseball game held on the high school field. Bristol, making the most of three hits, won their first Lower Bucks League game from Langhorne by a 4 to 1 count.

For the past few years Bristol has been looking for a capable moundman. They found one yesterday in Dutch Vandegrift, who handcuffed the Redskins with one measly bingle. Rugged Warren Gotwals, Langhorne's hard plunging fullback of last grid season, spoiled Vandegrift's hall of fame bid.

It now seems apparent that the Cardinals are woefully weak batters. Against Newtown they met the ball safely but four times. This follow up isn't exactly a Yankees "Murderers Row" figure. But by winning from Langhorne the locals did show enough to be rated as the dark horse of the league race. They could sting either Bensalem or Newtown and sew the loop up one way or another. Bobby Barouth, Campion's experienced shortstop, got the only other local hit. Incidentally, Barouth and Capriotti are the only two boys who have hit safely in the two circuit contests. All others have drawn zeros for the year.

Langhorne drew first blood in the second inning when Mitchell walked, stole second, went to third on a passed ball and tallied on Barouth's miscue. But Campion's crew came back to tally two runs in their half and from then on were never headed. Capriotti rammed a singling home run past left field that rolled to the fence to start the inning. Barouth followed with a double and later came home on Iannucci's fly to right field.

Two errors by Gotwals allowed Vandegrift to score in the third inning. Another Redskins bobbie, this time by Brathy, gave Tazak a lease to first. He advanced to second on an infield rap and scampered home on Army Capriotti's second hit of the day.

Vandegrift struck out nine in his one hit. He had to be good to outlast Langhorne's Bob Mitchell, who gave up but three bingles. The Redskins received ragged support from his mates, however.

German long-range Big Berthas mounted on the French coast were reported engaging in a mighty duel today as thunderous explosions rocked the continental shores of the English Channel.

The new phase in the battle of Britain began at 8 p. m., when the German guns near Calais began shelling the Dover area at regular intervals. The shelling was still in progress a few minutes before noon.

It appeared, however, that huge British bombers were giving the French coastal districts around Calais and Cape Gris Nez, where the Nazi Big Berthas are situated, a terrific simultaneous pounding.

Residents of the British southeastern coastal region heard tremendous explosions on the European side of the channel and saw huge columns of smoke rising far into the sky.

The aerial-artillery battle represented a continuation of heavy air attacks during the night, during which the Luftwaffe concentrated on the southwestern British seaport of Plymouth and British planes pummeled the docks at Brest.

The RAF night attack on the German naval base evidently was aimed at inflicting further damage on the 26,000-ton German battle cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisenau, moored there since returning from Atlantic forays.

To Set New Trial

New York, Apr. 29—A new trial for George Cvek, 23-year-old Harrisburg youth charged with the strangulation slaying of Catherine Pappas, pretty Bronx housewife, will be set sometime within two weeks, court attaches reported today.

Judge James J. Barret declared a mistrial in the case yesterday on motion of Martin Benjamin, Cvek's lawyer.

Urge Slash In State Levies

Harrisburg, Apr. 29—Senate Democrats, led by minority leader Harry Shapiro of Philadelphia today urged an immediate slash in levies as the result of rising revenues.

Shapiro's remarks stirred a bitter debate in the upper chamber yesterday as the Senate was about to vote finally on two bills which would appropriate $6,300,000 to finance relief for the remainder of the biennium.

Believe Major Battle Over Egypt Now On

Cairo, Apr. 29—Capture of Sollum on the northwestern Egyptian coast by combined Italo-German forces led to belief in Cairo today that the major battle for possession of Egypt and the Suez Canal is now in full swing.

With Germany's conquest of Greece approaching its closing stages, the north African battle front appeared to be the next major war zone on land.

Authoritative Cairo quarters said they believed that Sollum is in enemy hands. The town apparently was captured by reinforced Axis troops after bitter skirmishing that lasted more than a week.

The first major Axis objective in Egypt in all likelihood is Mersa Matruh, an important port where begins the coastal railroad leading eastward to the great British naval base at Alexandria and the Suez canal. Mersa Matruh is 130 miles east of Sollum.

Nazis Warn Switzerland

Berlin, Apr. 29—Nazi Germany today delivered a sharp warning to peaceful Switzerland against its allegedly unneutral attitude.

FOOD MARKET

Advice-

ONE does not have to consult the thermometer this week to know that summer is just around the corner, but only to make a visit to the fruit and vegetable departments of the food stores.

The warm settled weather throughout the South is reflected in an abundance of fresh vegetables and fruits in market. Week-end shoppers in the largest of the food chains will find a variety of low priced vegetables among which to select, those including asparagus, beets, carrots, celery, iceberg lettuce, new Florida potatoes, cabbage and spinach.

In the matter of fruits there is also an excellent selection, as South American shipments have been heavy this week and the Porto Rican pineapples are arriving in great abundance, while the Florida citrus fruit season has not yet begun to wane. The best buys in fruits are apples, bananas, grapefruit, pineapples, oranges and strawberries.

Meat prices, too, remain favorable to the budget and there are any number of specials for the week-end. Among the better priced cuts are beef steaks, boneless chuck pot roast, lamb chops and legs, veal legs and rumps, broilers and fryers, turkeys, roasting chickens, fowl and ducklings.

Fresh Fish Lower

Owing to the present warm weather, production is increasing on most fresh water fish and prices are lower. Fresh mackerel has begun to arrive and larger supplies are expected with prices reasonable for the beginning of the season. Roe and buck shad are now at the peak of their production and the supply of fresh porgies has increased, with low prices prevailing on all these items. Among the other low priced fish from which to choose are fresh sea bass, porgies, clams, Spanish mackerel and fresh butterfish.

In the Boston area there is a good supply of smelts available at very reasonable prices. Haddock and cod are the best values with frozen fillets expected to be cheap this week.

Based on attractively priced items over the week-end, the following menu is suggested for Sun day dinner:

Fresh Tomato Bisque
Chicken with Dumplings
Buttered String Beans
Bread and Butter
Shredded Carrot and Lettuce Salad
Strawberry Tarts
Tea or Coffee

Germany harbors no aggressive intentions towards Switzerland, a spokesman insisted, but in the future the press must refrain from undue criticism.
